The late William Rockefeller was a billiard enthusiast who had a billiard table in his home. Although ivory billiard balls could not be guaranteed to keep true or retain their resiliency, he sought the best and paid the highest prices for them. On one occasion he remarked, "If I had control of the supply of good ivory I would make buyers pay well for it."

"Little Charlie" Davis, whose age is not public information but is estimated the season on the water.

To-day Davis is more remarkable than ever before. Doctors who have been attending and watching him for nearly seven years pronounce him "a wonder." On November 26, 1915, he awoke to find his left side paralyzed, his left arm useless. Subsequently he had two more strokes, one of which partially affected his right side.
